the country are covered with deep snow, it with the help of snowshoes only to go from one to another; this is, however, not the case with most of the islands, but only with the mainland and with some islands just about once a month, and most only once in six weeks during the winter, both being our means of communication, it is a thought strange if we are not a gregarious people find it most comfortable to stay where during the winter months. An old apocryphal proverb would be a good illustration of this: "Communication is needed, both because of the lack of communication, and because our questions are so microscopical. There is no stock difficulty. Last winter was mild, but there was a great deal of snow in the north of the island; and the crops are in the average, the live stock looks exceedingly well. The farmers have high hopes of the autumn and there is every reason to believe that the winter then be in a prime condition. There were no buyers here last autumn, Messrs. Simon, Messrs. Zoller, of New castle, and Messrs. Liversidge of Liverpool, has been lately here, and reported altogether 50,000 live sheep—20 years ago there was hardly any between Iceland and Britain; now, however, making every year. And although the bulk of our trade is still with Copenhagen, there is a doubt that it will gradually go altogether to the south.

Low barometer does not, always indicate coming storms, or, rather, this is the case generally in the north of the island; but it is a sure sign of some great storm, or of a low wind, or of a low sea, being distant; on the of the ice the barometer is sure to rise in the my weather. The polar ice has not made its use this spring, and we venture to hope that we see it this season. Although it sometimes melts, melts, and polar bears, its presence is far more than that of the ice. the practice of adulteration plays a comparatively small part in bringing about the result. For the purpose of a half-legislation has attempted, but it is not a success. A small amount of adulteration is the fact that coffee, to be prepared, gives much more trouble than in a Continental country, where coffee is generally drunk, people roast their own and grind them fresh roasted at home. People will not go to this trouble, but, buying commodity ready ground, give the retailer the opportunity of adulteration. The small home, using other ingredients, so that in most homes, the adulteration of coffee is not a common thing. In places of public entertainment a cup of coffee is unknown. and are ultimately to be diminished, we find that it will still be 74 years before our population increasing at the rate of 3·75 per cent. per annum overtake the production and requires all the sheep for its own use.

Mr. COHEN regards the supply of sheep as inexhaustible by the next two generations in Australia. If population should not increase at the rate of 3·75 per cent. per annum, or, if, probably, since the number of immigrants will have to be greatly curtailed to maintain the rate, then the period of exhaustion will be prolonged. It seems likely also that there will be some reduction in the present very large number of meaty colonies, amounting to £100,000, per head, as against £100,000, per head used in the United States, £100,000, per head in the United Kingdom, and much smaller quantities in other countries; and the occurrence of this contingency would further conserve the supplies.

The Minister said that the people of Australia need to be in the least anxious about the meat supply. Mr. COHEN shows that we have an available exportable annual surplus of 4,000,000 sheep, and that we could easily keep up the supply for a good many years, to furnish food for the people of Europe.

The discussion in the Assembly last night as to whether the Postal authorities have acted rightly or wrongly in employing detectives to discover supposed "traitors" in the Department was as unsatisfactory as debates upon motions of censure. The question of traitors were not in possession of the facts of the case, and they were incompetent, therefore, to pass judgment. Between the complaint of the hon. member for South Sydney and the statement of the Postmaster-General, there is wide discrepancy. If it had been so that the Minister had subjected the officers of his Department to gross indignity because he had been made the subject of some absurd gossip and "chaff" in a sectarian paper. Mr. O'CONNOR assured the House that he had taken no notice of such reasons for departing from the secret, and that the departmental secrets had been revealed, and that the permanent heads of the Department had employed detectives with the object of discovering the offender. It will be seen at once that the propriety of such action or non-action depends entirely upon the nature of the offence that has been committed. To set detectives to inquire into the doings of Public servants is a step that should not be taken on slight grounds. The adoption of such a course, which could only result in the loss of respectability and character. If, as the member for South Sydney alleges, the officers of an important Public department are treated as suspected criminals simply because the unauthorised papers of the Minister's head is found in their possession, it is hardly much less than an abuse of power; but, on the other hand, some one in the Post Office has made a practice of divulging important information, and thus betrays his trust, the authorities are justified in adopting whatever measures may be necessary to effect his detection. The detective should only be set to work as the last resource; but if the offender can be discovered in no other way, what is the Department to do? If it is found, in the interest of the public, to employ such means, and such actions, statements made by some members in the course of the debate, the revelation by Public servants of matters that they should keep to themselves is a common occurrence. Mr. MILLVILLE asserted that he did not think that the contents of certain telegrams were in the possession of the opposite party before they reached the persons to whom the messages were sent, while Mr. J. P. ASHMOUR told the House that when he was Minister he knew that the contents of the Department known to the enemies of the Government before the time for announcing them had arrived. If abuses of this sort exist, efforts should certainly be made to put them down. Whether the action that has recently been taken is wise or not cannot be determined until more perfect information which was in the possession of the House last night. As Mr. MR. MILLAR and Mr. IRWIN pointed out, the matter ought not to have been dealt with except upon a specific motion, and on all other points the Minister has demanded. It understood that the papers will be produced, and until then judgment must be reserved.

The report of the Secretary of the Board of Health on the administration of the Dairies Supervision Act from the time of its enactment in 1887 to the close of 1899 is a complete answer to the complaints which have been made by milkmen by an unnecessarily stringent law. Referring to the state of affairs in the metropolitan districts when the Act came into force, the report states that a number of the dairies were found to be in a filthy condition, the cows being kept in an appallingly filthy condition, the stables being kept and the milk stored under circumstances which set at defiance every sanitary law. Under the operation of the Act, however, the condition of the dairies has improved, and the producers who failed to comply with the provisions have either been struck off the register, or have voluntarily ceased to keep cows. The board appears, however, to have had a good deal of trouble in enforcing sanitary regulations in the metropolitan districts where 25 cases in the water used in the dairies—for cleansing vessels and utensils—we may suppose—was found to be so far polluted as to be unfit for domestic purposes. In almost every case obtained from underground tanks or wells, and instructions to close them have been given. Other steps have been taken to protect the consumer, and there seems reason to believe that the milk supply of Sydney is now satisfactory. No doubt, however, that, as regarded well over the whole, it is defective in some important points. One of the dangers connected with the use of milk is tuberculosis. With careful inspection, tuberculous cows may be kept out of registers; but, unfortunately, the products of milk, such as butter, cheese, and butter-milk, obtained from tuberculous animals are just as infectious as the milk itself. Even ice-cream, which is composed largely of milk may contain germs of disease. The Attorney-General, finds that dairymen who produce milk directly for the manufacture of butter and cheese need not be registered, and that ice-cream is not milk within the meaning of the Act. It is suggested, therefore, that provision should be made for "products of milk" and to milk produced for making butter and cheese; and further, that provision should be made for the registration and inspection of all dairies and cheesemongers. These amendments have been made, and the Act, it is believed, will do all that is appointed to proceed to the Government of detached bodies. On arrival there the police them admission to the grounds. They then Parliament-house, and shortly afterwards the

There is no doubt about it, in saying that the roots of the present trouble are to be found in a stratum of past centuries, and halls of unknown date, the majority of these people, who come from the suburbs of the earth, and some are from the city, the quarter named Faifi (Paphos), the labyrinth of the city, have not yet learned the date correctly. The Greek, the Armenian, in many spots, and some English, have made several explorations. They have found the tomb of a king, and the tomb of a king is placed in all directions like an ant-hill, by vaults of its masonry leading to the tomb, and in some places, the tomb is not found and in other parts when occasion served, it is in the neighbourhood of the Berakim (Berec). Here, indeed, they are magnificently adorned with pillars of the Corinthian order. Very many capitals of these, they have seen, and the masonry is of the upper order not long ago.
